

Dear Nestlé,
I am writing to you due to your use of palm oil. Your products are truly wonderful but honestly, do you need it? Is it worth all of the trouble?

Your use of palm oil affects youthful, innocent animals and their families. 28,000 species of animals are expected to become extinct in the next 25 years if deforestation continues. Something must change if you wish to save the animals' future. Every 3 seconds, a football pitch worth of rainforest trees are cut down. How would you feel if people destroyed your home? I realise how a few less hundreds of people will buy your products and shareholders will consider selling their shares but couldn't you find an alternative to keep customers and shareholders happy? Or would you rather let the animals die?

Not only does deforestation affect the animals but also when the forests are burnt down young children can't go outside or go to school and learn, and the adults can't go to work and make money to feed their families while you sit at home and make millions. The biggest companies can make the biggest changes. Please prove to everybody that you can make a change. Yours Sincerely,
Ethan Williams
